About Halcy Bohen, Artist

Halcy Bohen's affinity for drawing and painting is akin to her other professional lives-- as a psychologist, teacher, author and Princeton University dean. Each role requires both close observation and a creative response from her. She thrives on the engagement with people and places in all these realms. In the visual arts, she often records her take on unique moments in specific settings, at home and abroad.

Her work---including plein-air landscapes, figures, animals, interiors, and still lives---done in oils, acrylics, ink, water color and prints, have been regularly exhibited and sold in solo and group shows at the Yellow Barn Gallery in Glen Echo Park, Maryland, on Bustins Island, Maine, the on-line Caladan Gallery, The Watergate Gallery and the Starfish Cafe on Capitol Hill, DC. More than 200 of her works are in private collections.

She has studied art for many years with Walt Bartman and other Yellow Barn faculty (and has a BA from Smith College, MAT from Harvard and Ph.D. from NYU). Her published drawings have appeared on CD albums, and in the journal, VOICES, the Art and Science of Psychotherapy. She taught children's art for the D.C. Department of Recreation and has written and illustrated many children's books, mostly imagined stories of her large, extended family.
